'Such matters are coming to court often these days'

► From P 1

In May, the court turned down the plea of a 35-year-old destitute HIV-positive rape survivor from Patna to abort her 26-week pregnancy as doctors felt the risks were unacceptable. The SC dealt with two cases on Friday, the other one being from Mumbai where it gave the go-ahead for termination of pregnancy. In the last one year, the court has been forced to deal with seven such requests from distressed women on grounds such as the foetus being terminally ill or deformed or in some cases, pregnancy was caused by sexual assault.

There remains a strong possibility that many are unable to seek legal redress and medical boards will provide improved options.

Finding the solicitor general present in the courtroom, Justice Khehar said, "Such matters are coming to court often these days and we cannot be dealing with them using powers conferred on the SC under Articles 141 and 142 of the Constitution. "Time is of essence in these cases. The health of the pregnant woman and foetus needs prompt medical examination. A lot of time is wasted in the aggrieved persons moving the court, which in turn directs the concerned administration to set up a medical board to examine the mother to determine the risk and feasibility of the medical termination of pregnancy." In many cases, the women first moved high courts. "Why not set up permanent medical boards which can promptly deal with such requests without pregnant women being forced to rush to courts. You can place our suggestion before the competent authority to incorporate it in the proposed bill. It would be good if such mechanism is put in place through legislative measure," the bench said. The SG assured the court that he would convey the suggestion to the government promptly. Section 3 of the MTP Act, 1971, says pregnancy cannot be terminated after 20 weeks. A bill of 2014, pending in Parliament, proposes to extend the legally permissible period for termination of pregnancy to 24 weeks.

Place on record all SC orders on Karnan: HC

The Delhi high court asked the Centre on Friday to place on record all the orders passed by the Supreme Court against jailed former HC judge C S Karnan. Karnan has approached HC challenging the constitutionality of the Contempt of Courts Act. The bench also rapped Karnan's lawyer for misquoting the SC verdict. TNN

New Delhi: India's Aircraft Accident Investigation Bureau (AAIB) has asked the Directorate General of Civil Aviation (DGCA) to develop a fatigue risk management policy and ask airlines to create a crew fatigue-reporting mechanism to cut down possibility of accidents being caused due to this factor. The board made this recommendation in its probe report of an incident where fatigued pilots landed an aircraft without air traffic control (ATC) clearance — despite being asked to go around — on a runway that was being inspected by personnel on two jeeps.
